

Karen Ulvestad is a wildlife and landscape photographer, with a passion for photographing birds. Her work has been published in magazines, brochures, websites, and cards. She self-publishes books through blurb.com using both her writing and photography skills and her latest book is titled Northwest Passage. She writes a photography blog on destinations, techniques, and tips. She gives photography presentations at bird festivals and other events. Through the years, her style evolved from photographing landscapes, people, wildlife, and commercial work through-out the western United States, the Caribbean, Hawaii, and Canada. Her work spans more than twenty-five years.
